From the Pastor: Virginia Gerbrandt Richert

In preparation for Sunday's sermon I spent a lot of time thinking about thankfulness and gratitude. I thought about this in the context of our lives and our world, in the midst of joys and celebrations as well as in pain and suffering (and Covid).

I have also been reflecting on how we share our thankfulness and gratitude. Sometimes when families gather for thanksgiving they go around and invite people to share one or two things that they are thankful for. When we have done this in my extended family, I have always appreciated it. It was a way for me to join in with other's thankfulness, but also, with family members I don't see as often, it gave me more insight into their lives.

This year some of our gatherings will look different due to Covid restrictions and precautions. My extended family will not be gathering at all because the majority of them are in Winnipeg. So, in the absence of family gatherings, or in addition to them, I invite you to share the things that you are thankful for with those around you. Invite them to join you in your thanks, and offer them a glimpse into what you are focusing on.
