From the Pastor – Virginia Gerbrandt Richert

Recently I have noticed that my emotions are all over the place, including a lot of negative emotions like anger, frustration, sadness or a sense of feeling overwhelmed. I know that life with young children can be tiring, but it is more than that. Through conversations and reflections, I have come to realize that most of these emotions are really just a symptom of grief. I am grieving what we have lost through this time of COVID.

And I am not the only one that has lost things or is grieving. In many conversations I have had recently, whether people realize it or not, they are naming what they have lost, be it travel opportunities, sporting events, to participate in or watch, time with family or loved ones, outdoor activities, job opportunities, or even having things simply go back to normal.

This time of COVID has created a strange dynamic where the restrictions have caused losses and grief for everyone in our society in some way. Which means that all of us are dealing with grief on some level. And that is one of the hardest parts to understand. Because everyone deals with grief differently.

For myself I have found that the most helpful thing to do is to acknowledge and accept that that is where my emotions are coming from. Dealing with grief is much easier when we know that we are grieving. From there I try to accept the unpredictable journey that grief will take me on. Then I try to be kind and gentle with myself as well as with others who are on their own journey with grief.

A note from the Covid Task Force: wearing masks as we prepare to welcome children back to Sunday School.

Our church is preparing to begin Sunday School before the end of September. In keeping with the precautions of schools and other community places, we are asking children to wear masks when they come to Sunday School. Because we are asking this of children, we are asking this of adults as well. Beginning on our homecoming Sunday, September 13, we are asking everyone who comes to worship, could you please wear a mask prior to entering the building until seated in a pew. It is okay to take off your mask once seated, but we ask that you wear your mask again when leaving your pew and visiting indoors, until you have exited the building. As we anticipate larger Sunday morning gatherings, increased activity in our building, and the challenge of physically distancing, this is a way to honour each other, create a safer environment, and demonstrate our love for the children of our church community. Individuals who live with conditions making it difficult to wear a mask are not asked to wear one.
